Pronunciation of Words. Here are some of the commonest words in the language that are habitually mispronounced by men of the legal profession.

The entire class of words, like prog ress, process, prod-uet, pref-ace, pred-ecessor, are pronounced pro-gress, pro-cess, pro duct, pre-face, pre-decessor, in violation of the rules laid down by our two highest authorities. So in the words ep och, ten-ets, trib-une, ven ue, nomad, the consonant, it common practice, is improperly joined to the last syllable instead of the first. In the words ob-ligatory, ex emplary, in-teresting, per-emptory, con-strued, the authorities require that the accent should be thrown forward on the first syllable. In a large class of words, like ductile, fertile, reptile, hostile, puerile, engine, mercantile, maratime, ermine, the blunder is usually committed of giving the "i" the long instead of the short

And we daily hear re-sources for resources, the penult being accented; noncombat-acts for noncom-batants; against, giving the "a" the long sound when the proper pronunciation is "agensi;" we hear the timproperly sounded in often, where it is silent; the z sound is seldom given to the final c in such words as sufficand sacrifice; appellant is pronounced every way, including the right way, which is with the accept on the penuli; pre-tense is wrongly accented on the last syllable; statutory is called statu ary; the long i in the penult of aspirant is seldom given the accent as it should be, and a similar error is committed in pronouncing oppo nent by throwing the accent too far forward.

Irrevocable should, of course, have the accent on the "rev," and indisputable on the "dis;" while in lamentable authority requires that the first sylable shall be accented. There is no excuse for mispronouncing such words as archives, where the i has the long English sound; or finance, in which the i has the short satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine "-[Dr. J. W. Mason. Latin words def-icit and suf-icit can be pronounced in but one way, namely, with all the vowels short and the f joined to the first syllable, which is accented. He is a grossly illiterate lawyer who, at this day, would pronounce Magna Charta in any other manner than with the ch as k, or pronounce fide in the phrase bona fide, as a word of one syllable. How the lawyers can get "dam" out of the word mandamus, in defiance of all the rules of the Engish and the Latan languages, we abandon as a hopeless inquiry. One would suppose that a law student could not blunder in the pronunciation of the French word laches, which is identical with our English word last es in sound, but there are such innumerable "latches" in every forum that attorneys must think that door latches, or the absence of them, have everything to do with the question of neglect.

One word only-which, by the way, is not unly, but only, with the olong-and we dismiss this branch of the sulject. The preposition topronounced like the last syllable in the word canoe, or, if not emphatic, a little shorter-is propounced by many learned gentlemen like the word tow. Whether the learned coursel have in mind anything so combustible as tow and flax, or only tow toats, it is nevertheless manifest that they two often try in vain to tow their clients' barks over the nine judicial breakers which must be safely passed before reaching a a haven .- Wash Capital.

A WAR STORY .- The following curious story we find in the Rome (Ga. ) Journal, the editorclaiming that it has never before been pub

While Pickett's division was before Newbern, General Pickett received, by truce, a let ter from a gentleman in Boston, accompanied by a package of money containing two thousand dollars, in which the writer stated that he had a brother, a Federal officer, in the Libby prison; that his brother was a former comrade of Pickett in the Mexican war, and appealed to him by the friendship of their old days to forward the money to his brother. The appeal touched the generous heart of this brave sol-dier, and he at once dispatched an orderly with the money to the officer. The orderly, tempted by the unusual sight of so much greenbacks, basely deserted the lines and escaped with the booty. As soon as Pickett heard of the desertion he immediately went to Richmond, and by a mortgage on his Turkey Island property succeeded in borrowing $2,000, which he carried to the prison with an explanation and apology for the delay The officer, when he learned by what manned by what manned by what manned by the Constant badden is learned by what means the General had raised the money, declined to accept one thousand dollars of it; but with that nice sense of honor which distinguished the true Southern gentleman, General Pickett compelled him to do so. The two soldiers then talked over the brave old days of the past, when together they fought under the same flag, and as the conversation ripened into a friendly confidence, the prisoner frankly told the General that his object was to escape it possible, and that he intended using some of the money he had paid him in the ef fort. The General checked him at once by teiling him that he could not receive his confidence in such a matter; that the money was his own and that he had a right to do with it as he pleased, but it would be improper for him to become a party to his plans. He then left. The prisoner did escape. The war end ed disastrously to the South, and General Pick ett's estate was sold to satisfy the mortgage which he had executed to pay a Federal prisoner in his hands-the money which had been stolen from him by the connivance of the enemy. Would it not be bester for Blaine to hunt up such acts as these than to gloat so fiendishly over Andersonville?
